- Storyline:
- With the growing crisis in Iraq, WFP has started providing food assistance to the most vulnerable families who found sanctuary in the Kurdish region after fleeing their homes when the northern Iraqi city of Mosul fell to a rebel offensive.
- WFP has begun to distribute food on to internally displaced people at Kalak camp, in the area between Erbil and Mosul, with the help of partners such as ACTED and the International Organization for Migration. (Note: distributions began on Sunday 15 June.)
- A WFP-chartered flight is due to arrive on Tuesday from Abu Dhabi to Erbil carrying logistics equipment from the UN Humanitarian Response Depot (UNHRD) in Dubai on behalf of the UN humanitarian community.
- WFP staff are on the ground in Erbil conducting rapid assessments of the humanitarian situation with other UN agencies. Initial reports show that in the areas between Mosul and the Kurdistan Region (KRG), food is scarce in the shops and markets and government services including electricity and water have broken down. Displaced families told UN staff that they wish to stay in KRG until the situation becomes safe again.
- Before the wave of displacements from violence in Mosul, WFP was already assisting about 240,000 people displaced by conflict in Iraq's al-Anbar region, as well as more than 100,000 refugees from the conflict in Syria, who are sheltering in Iraq.
- In total, it is estimated that nearly one million people are internally displaced in Iraq – 500,000 newly displaced from Mosul City and a further 480,000 who fled the fighting al-Anbar in recent months (according to OCHA).
