WFP Regional Syrian Refugee Response(Lebanon, Jordan, Iraq)
Geneva 28 June 2012

WFP is launching a regional emergency operation to cover the food needs of vulnerable Syrians in Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq. Recent joint needs assessments showed that food was a priority need.

Many Syrians left with few assets and little cash and have now depleted their savings and are increasingly dependent on host communities and humanitarian assistance.

WFP's operation, aligned with the United Nations Regional Response Plan, will help them meet immediate food needs using an innovative food voucher system. In Lebanon, for example, throughout June and July, WFP will assist around 27,000 Syrians through food vouchers in the Bekaa Valley. With the vouchers, beneficiaries can buy their own food from local shops when and as they need, choosing from a varied food list which includes fresh produce such as dairy products (cheese, milk, yogurt) and eggs, which are not normally included in food rations. WFP often uses vouchers when food is available in the market but people do not have enough money to buy it. The use of vouchers also boosts the local economy.

This intervention also complements the generosity of the hosting governments and communities that have exerted immense efforts to alleviate their suffering since the onset of this conflict.

Hot meals and other food assistance will be provided for new arrivals and those in transit centers, such as in Jordan. In Iraq, food assistance will be provided until vouchers are introduced in September.

The WFP operation covers six months, beginning with 67,000 beneficiaries in July and increasing gradually to reach 120,000 people in December. It will require immediate funding of US$23.8 million.

In Syria itself WFP has scaled up its operations to reach half a million people in need of food assistance and is preparing to further expand operations in July to reach 850,000 people, following an agreement between the UN and the Syrian government to allow more access to areas affected by the on-going conflict.
